Whatever decision is made, I believe the ease of use by the general public is the overwhelming issue. Standardization is very important. I really don't care what the standardization is except that it should be in the user realm, not some company's agenda. I do believe that the marketplace will take care of 99% of all issues. I dread the government's involvement. Sometimes elected officials get involved when they shouldn't and sometimes they don't get involved when they should. I think the economy of the US is much better served by Congress when they listen to the public as opposed to a few companies which failed in their technology and/or marketing.
